RE-CHAIR

Kartell is continuing its strategy of producing original products which combine sustainable materials with the latest production technology, offering new creative impulses based around the core principle of respect for the environment – a message championed by the Kartell Loves the Planet industrial manifesto. It's against this backdrop that the company has unveiled the final version of Re-Chair, designed by Antonio Citterio and made from recycled materials. The name captures the very essence of the piece: RE stands for recycled, while CHAIR is a nod to Kartell's trademark product, creating a link between the past and future. The result is a chair produced according to sustainable principles, characterised by bold, square lines which succeed in creating a sense of lightness and solidity all at once. The style of Re-Chair means it can be positioned in various different parts of the home, from the dining room to the study. Perfect for the Habitat setting, the chair is also an ideal piece for Office use.

Re-Chair has been unveiled after a period of finalisation, during which structural and functional testing was carried out. The material the chair is made from is composed of pure, uncontaminated materials deriving from other sectors.

Suitable for both indoor and outdoor use, Re-Chair is stackable and comes in black, white, grey, green or dove grey.
